FOREST MYSTERY.

George attered a low groap, and buried his face in his hands; then raising it, he enveloped himself in his shrouding mantle, and wringing the lawyer's hand, disappeared through the door, and was lost in the darkness of the night.

"Fine fellow, that," mused Brown, after George had gone. "Let me see; an hour hence I must to the hell, to see about matters there." When Mirs. Remesen left Julia's room, the latter lay wearied and exhausted for a few moments, and then exclaimed, as she heard the clock strike nine:

"Nine o'cleck! how wearily time passes, and convulsive pains thrill my heart. Can it be death already? O God! must I meet that hus-band who so early went to his tomb—the vicilm of an assassin—who died thinking me so falso? O George, if you knew how I repent of that! There is a tenderness fills me at the remembrance of your love, which tells me we might have been happy, had I not cherished revenge so

"What has my life been? one of misery, pac-ion and wee! how does it end? no husband, no child's hand to arrange my pillow, no words of love to sooth my passage to the grave; unloved, unloving, I must toil the weary way alone. The only one I might have bound to me by ties which even death has no power to sever, is gone, and I am my own victim. O, George, would to God I could hear forgiveness from your lips, now so cold in the lowly to ab."

"God bless you Julia, for those repentant words!" said a deep, thrilling, impussioned voice, and gazing hastily around, she beheld the tall cloaked figure, standing near the docr.

"As God forgives you, so do I."

The garment fell off, and she beheld George Crapliffe, who had eatered the room unperceived,

"A third time he has risen from his grave to taunt me," grouned the wretched woman, cover-ing her eyes to keep out what she deemed the shade of her dead husband. "But no; it was fergiveness he spoke.

"Julia." Twas a morial touch rested upon her hand, and drew it from her face, and with his deep, dark eyes looking down into her's, was he, she thought lying cild in the ground; there was fascination in his glance, and she did not move until he again spoke.

"Tis no shade you see, but your husband, living, breathing, healthful, but sorrowing to see you thus."

"O God, do not cheat me with this delusion; Who are you, that thus speak?"

"Believe me, Julia, I am he you thought murdered The assassin struck at the wrong heart, and missed his victim By a strange co

Committee.

The President, to when was referred the communication from the Board of Fire Wardens relative to the salary due the late Robt. B. Sauderson, reported that he had succeeded to having a resolution adopted by the Common Council, directing the Comptroller to pay the smount of Mr. Sanderson's valiery to his widow, up to the lat of April next, with the understanding hat the remaining wardens were to perform the delice of office.

The following resolution, offered by Mr. J. P. Weamar, of Hose 5, was adopted:

Resolved, That the Trustees be authorized to procure a suitable case for the preservation of the Fire Department Bannes, and that the same be placed in charge of the Officers of the Board.

Mr. Curtis, of Hook and Ladder 4, from the Committee on Suggestions in the Trustees' report of 1813, reported progress.

Mr. Jonas N. Phillips, from the Trustee Board, presented the following report of that body for the year 1859;

ANNUAL REPORT.

To the Representatives of the New York Pire Department;

ANNI AL REPORT.
To the Representatives of the New York Fire Department:

As the termination of the present year approaches, your Trustees are reminded of their annual duty, to report to the stoard of Representatives a statement of the various duties entrusted to their charge; and it is with failure of sincere gravitude to a beneficent Trovide Lee, for His merciful kindness in permitting ratio enloy a year of prosparity, free from war, pestitione and familine, that we humby return our thanks for His grackens favor, whereby we have been enabled to sixlar ge our trut. In adding the widow, the orphat, as done brother fremen. And if the amount expended for that purpose is not as larse as the previous year, it he a creditable fact to the many recipients of the func, that it souly in adversity that they seek its sanitance.

Your Trustees are desirous that not only the Board of Representatives, but the whole bedy of the fremen should be perfectly familiar with the many and responsible duties which we are called to discharge, for we are astisfied that if our brettren in the active ranks of the Department are awakened to the innovisit besting that is exactly down the financial affairs of the Department by the mora of cut remarks of the Department are awakened to the innovisit besting that is exactly down the financial affairs of the Department by the mora of cut in the active ranks of cut volunter Department, to imitate the currer of those who, is past years, by their excellent conduct have made their names and memory dear to our citizens, and it is by following their example, and that only, that cut noble lighting their example, and that only, that cut noble lighting their example, and that only, that cut noble lighting their example, and it is by following their example, and it has a succ protection in her military force, and, if necessity required, could summon a powerful duxiliary in the stury and efficient Fire the partment—no insignificant powers to support and online to the isw, and mainting order.
